Bookshelves & gardens are...

pretty much the same thing, right? We know each book starts with the seed of an idea, but there's a whole lot that goes into bringing a book into the world. Gardens may start simple, but every fruit and flower requires a team of sunlight, water and soil.

Every time I plant a seed, it is an act of hope.
I hope a tiny plant will grow.
I hope the weather will cooperate.
I hope the birds won't notice my ripening tomatoes.
I hope my neighbors won't mind me dropping off more cucumbers.

Each book we publish is an act of hope.
We want to give kids tiny tastes of discovery and delight.
To awaken in them appetites for information and imagination.
To spark empathy and exploration.

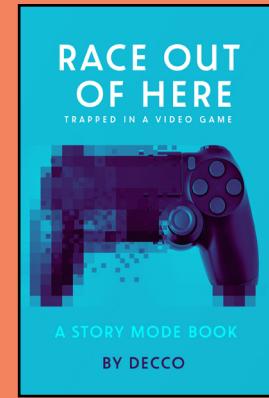

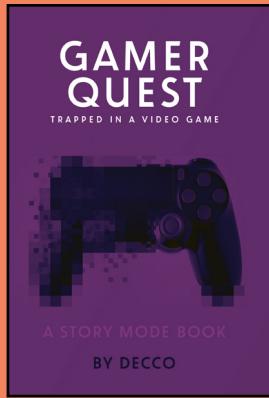

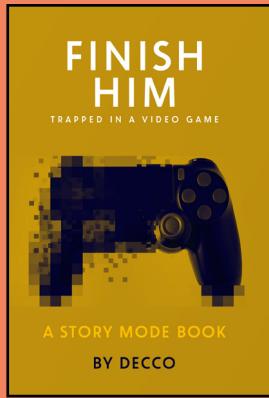

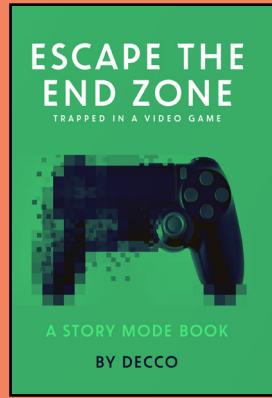

We hope the kids in your world develop a lifetime love of reading.
We hope they will find their place in the stories that surround them.
We hope that they will grow up strong and smart and brave.

Books are for growing.
Books are for hope.

Decco

Or was it?

Jack looked down. He was sweaty. He could feel bruises on his side and his clothes were soiled. There was grass in his shirt. He looked at the game. The score was 28-21. His team had won.

Jack sat back. He was tired. But he was also happy. He had played a real football game. He had been a real quarterback. Or had he? Jack wasn't sure.

Escape the End Zone

He told them the plan. They listened. They nodded. They seemed to like the plan. Jack felt good. He was becoming a part of the team. He was not just a player in a game. He was a real quarterback.

The huddle broke. They went to their places. Jack was ready. He was going to make this play work. He was going to show everyone he could do this. Jack took a deep breath. He was ready for the snap.
